SENIORS OF THE WEEK

John Fullerton Myles Phipps

JOHN FULLERTON Guard 200 6'3

John ends his western Football career this season as one of Western's finest linesmen in several years. Last season at the tackle position John was voted all conference on the offensive team. Many of the teams claim John as the best offensive blocker in the league. As a freshman John played very little football and didn't letter. As a sophomore John finally saw action as he worked his way from second string tackle to first string by mid-season. This year John has been shifted from tackle to guard to make use of his speed vital to the guard position.

John graduated from Shoreline High School in 1960 where he played tackle. At Western he is an above average student majoring in Math and he plans to go into teaching upon graduation.

MYLES PHIPPS Tackle 205 6'0

Myles is one of the two three-year lettermen on this year's team. At present he is the starting offensive tackle in Coach Lounsberry's two platoon system. As a freshman Myles played tackle on the defensive platoon. As a sophomore Myles was also delegated to the defensive platoon as the Vikings had strong depth in the tackle position. Last year Myles moved to the offensive team and has been a mainstay at the position ever since.

Myles graduated in 1960 from Port Angeles High School. At Western Myles is majoring in Chemistry and has a grade point well above 3.0. After graduation Myles also plans to go into teaching.

The Football Official

By Leo H. Peterson
Sports Editor, United Press International

There isn't much glamor connected with their jobs, and they don't receive much money, but those guys dressed in white knickers and black and white shirts you see down on the field are mightly important.

For they are the officials who will control the conduct of the game you will see today and who, in fact, control the conduct of the great game of college football.

They go unnoticed for the most part, except when they throw down a red penalty flag against your team at a critical moment. They become conspicuous only when they become involved in controversy. Yet because of the part they play and the decisions they are called upon to make they are as vital to the game as the players and the coaches.

So, with little monetary reward — and few compliments compared to the number of criticisms — football fans naturally wonder:

"Where do they come from? How are they trained? How are they selected? Supervised? evaluated?"

They come from business, industry, municipal, state and federal government agencies, private and public schools and varied professions. They are highly skilled, their training is long and thorough, yet to most of them football officiating is just a hobby, the fee paid for their services being very nominal. When they get to the very top, the most they receive is $135 a game and expenses. Until they get to the top their fees range as low as $25 per game and expenses.

Their attitude toward the job they are doing is embodied in the constitution and by-laws of the Eastern Association of Intercollegiate football officials:

"The purposes of this association shall be to promote the welfare of the American intercollegiate game of football, its players and officials; to maintain the highest standards of officiating; to encourage the spirit of fair play and sportsmanship, to have available at all times an adequate number of thoroughly trained and capable officials for use by the various appointing authorities; and to cooperate with all other organizations officially connected with the American intercollegiate game of football in furthering its interests and ideals."

The immediate past president of that Eastern organization is Ray Barbuti, an executive of the New York State government. A football and track star at Syracuse, Barbuti was the Olympic 400-meter champion in 1928.

Most of the football officials are former high school and college players, some of them All-Americans, dedicated to intercollegiate athletics in general and college football in particular. One may by your next door neighbor, your physician or dentist, a sales executive, a college dean, a lawyer, an engineer or a state senator.

At an intersectional game you might see an attorney (Gaspar Perricone of Denver) teaming with a former All-American and FBI agent who is now a security officer at a Fort Worth aircraft plant (V.B.Hale). That same day a physician from Lorian, Ohio (Dr. Robert Scholz) could be taking off to work a game with a broker from the floor of the New York Stock Exchange (Walter Scholl) or an Army Colonel from the Southwest (Taylor Wilkins) or a certified public accountant from down South.

While a college football player background is desired, it is not required. In most instances, however, this type of experience and background speeds up the development of a football official.

Training usually follows this pattern: They begin by handling junior high school or secondary school games; next they progress to college freshman and junior varsity competition. Finally, they advance to small college and then major college contests. The average time required to reach the top is about ten years.

Throughout the training process, many officials fall by the wayside with only the more competent and the more dedicated advancing to the top. Those who reach the college level belong to conference groups selected and assigned by the various conferences commissioners and/or executive secretaries.

Throughout the nation, these officials are required to attend clinics at which football rules and mechanics of football officiating are studied in exhaustive detail. There are practical demonstrations of specific game situations in some instances and before each session the official must pass a written examination.

And, of course, to be eligible to work games, he must pass a thorough physical examination.

During the course of each season officials are observed by members of conference offices or by observers commissioned by authorities for this necessary appraisal. In addition, college athletic directors and coaches usually rate the officials who work their games.

Although the method of supervision and rating of officials will vary in the various conferences, the underlying principles are the same.

Thus it is that those officials are down there on the job, not by chance or whim, but as the result of carefeul planning and thorough preparation. These men are an essential part of intercollegiate athletics, and they make a valuable contribution to its welfare and success.

Al Anderson

Linebacker

Al returned to the Viking lineup last weekend against Linfield and continued where he had left off when he was injured in the U.B.C. game. In the U.B.C. game Al made six tackles in one half before suffering a concussion. Returning to action against Linfield he made seven tackles.

With the return of Al, who is only a freshman, the Vikings defense will be bolstered by one of the best linebackers in the league.
