GRIDIRON REPORT

Dickinson is "Mr. Consistency" on offense

Sometimes the nicest things come in the smallest packages.

John Dickinson is one such surprise.

The 5-foot-8, 175-pound sophomore tailback and flankerback has proved to be so consistent in his dual roles on the Western Washington University football team that Coach Paul Hansen was moved to say: "John has been our one real bright spot on offense this year."

As a running back, Dickinson leads the team with 333 yards on 80 carries. As a receiver, he's also the team leader, having hauled in 29 passes for 252 yards. His eight touchdowns in six games are threatening the all-time WWU standard of 11 TDs set by Norm Hash in 1951.

Last year as a freshman, Dickinson ran for 766 yards, the seventh highest total in WWU history. That included efforts of 161 yards versus Puget Sound and 136 against today's Columbia Football League opponent, Simon Fraser.

"John has excellent hands, and that makes him a threat both as a runner and a pass receiver," Hansen says. "He's real tough and real quick. Although he's small, he's compensated for his lack of size in other ways, and that may have made him a better football player in the long run."

What does a 5-foot-8 running back look for when he's got the ball and is staring into the helmets of defensive linemen six to eight inches taller and 60 to 80 pounds heavier than himself?

"I look for grass with no bodies on it," Dickinson says. "We have basic blocking schemes in the offensive line, and I know where the holes are supposed to be. If they're not there, I find my own holes."

Injuries in the Vikings' offensive line have resulted in a lack of holes, and Dickinson sympathizes with the problem.

"The new guys who step in to replace the injured players have the ability to do the job, but they lack week-to-week experience," he says. "Running backs and wide receivers can learn their jobs by studying before the season starts, but the linemen have to change their blocking schemes dramatically week to week, based on the different defenses we face. They have to make the most adjustments of anybody."

Injuries have also depleted the Western receiving corps, and when Dickinson was asked to slide over from his tailback slot and start at flanker last Saturday at Oregon Tech, he quickly complied.

He could find himself back on the wing again this week versus the Clansmen.

"I love catching the ball," he says. "I feel more comfortable at tailback, but I'll make any sacrifice if it's going to help us win. We have good running backs in Scott Lohr and Sonny Degala."

There's a lot more finesse involved playing wide out than at running back," says Dickinson. "That's especially true when you're blocking. It's hard to switch between a cornerback, for example, who is used to 'matadoring,' and a charging outside linebacker, who wants to tear your head off."

A business major who is contemplating a career in coaching, Dickinson, 19, was a three-year starter at running back and cornerback for Redmond High School. He averaged over 100 yards a game running and receiving his senior year, and was recruited by a number of schools.

At first, Dickinson was leaning toward perennial NAIA powerhouse Linfield College, but Western eventually won out. "I felt that I'd be playing right away," Dickinson said. "I liked the positive attitude of the coaching staff, and the opportunity to be a part of turning this into a winning program."

Dickinson didn't start immediately at Western. In fact, he was listed third on the depth chart when the 1985 season began. But injuries and lack of expected performance from other players gave him a chance that he took full advantage of.

"I got some breaks at the beginning of the season," Dickinson freely admits. "I got the opportunity to start in the second game, and I certainly have gained some satisfaction from what I've done. On the other hand, that's no consolation without the wins."

Wins. With 15 games as a Viking behind him, John's seen only four in the "W" column. "But we're getting closer," he says. "I know it's a cliche, but we can't keep waiting 'til next year. We've got to get a winning attitude — and that comes through developing confidence, through practice, developing a camaraderie with teammates and getting a few breaks, like coming back in the fourth quarter to win."

As for the scoring record, John says:

"You've got to score points to win, and it doesn't matter who does it. I guess the number of touchdowns I've scored are a reflection of the confidence Coach Hansen has in me to carry the ball when we're in scoring situations.

"If we were winning more games, and if I scored a touchdown to win a game, it would mean even more."

The best minds in America are growing up in places like Bellingham.

And at Georgia-Pacific, we want to make sure they realize their full potential. That's why we offer college scholarships throughout many of the communities where G-P operates.

This year, Bellingham Division granted four $5,000 scholarships to graduating seniors in Bellingham and Whatcom County. Nationally, the company awarded a total of 113 scholarships in 1986 valued at $645,000.

It's not surprising to us that a town like this is such an excellent place to learn and grow. After all, that's why we're here.
